Determining if it Makes Sense to Move or Remodel

If you already own your home or have significantly paid down your mortgage, your first instinct might be to make it larger or more efficient. But you must weigh the time, expense, and inconvenience of remodeling against the pricier options of buying and building. Whichever choice you make, ensure you understand the available financing options.

Get ready for sticker shock. Housing prices rose over 10% in 2020 thanks to sharply lower inventory.¹ Accordingly, the average number of days on market for home sales fell significantly. Demand has been strong in all 50 of the largest U.S. metro markets, but your local real estate professionals can discuss housing prices for the neighborhoods that interest you. Mortgage interest rates are low, making it easier to finance homes despite inflated prices.

Remodeling lets you stay put. Some considerations that favor remodeling are proximity to schools, work, friends, and family. The cost will depend on the scope of the work and whether you'll be contributing sweat equity. For 2020, whole-house renovations averaged between $15 and $60 per square foot, depending on home size, appliances, quality of materials, etc.² If you just want to remodel a bathroom or kitchen, expect to pay $100 to $250 per square foot. Remodeling builds equity, but don't underestimate the hassle and inconvenience of living on a job site.

Homebuilding puts you in control. When you have strong ideas about the shape, size, layout, and location of your home, building it from scratch can make a lot of sense. The average cost to construct a new home in 2020 was $248,000, with cost per square foot ranging from $100 to $155.³ You can simplify the process by buying a plan from a local homebuilder. Furthermore, manufactured and modular homes can go up quite quickly and are usually built to high standards. Don't forget to factor in the cost of land, which can add considerably to the overall expense.

Homes in all price points are selling at inflated prices. In 2020, the median home price rose to more than $300,000, and was $307,000 in midyear.⁴ PREVIEW ONLY As inventory narrows, you can expect prices to continue to rise. Member FINRA/SIPC Budget constraints may have you looking at older homes, which means you will probably be inheriting some problems left over by the seller. Always use an independent home inspector before making a final bid, and budget for any immediate repairs.

Your home is your costliest investment. Financing a home purchase, construction, or renovation is an important factor in getting what you want at a price you can afford. Many people are eligible for FHA loans, but there are many other options. If you've got the housing bug, contact me to discuss how it fits into your overall financial plan. Together, we can figure out which alternative makes the most sense while observing your financial constraints.

Family Financial Review

Planning for your family's financial future doesn't have to fall on your shoulders only. By having your spouse or children participate in these conversations, I believe we can create an empowered, unified approach to your family's financial future. I would welcome an opportunity to meet with you and your loved ones to understand each person's priorities and financial goals so that we can work toward creating a custom, holistic education plan that addresses your family's unique needs. This meeting will be about goals and the broad picture of your family's future; we do not need to discuss money and numbers if you would prefer not to. Having family planning conversations sooner rather than later can potentially help minimize future disagreements and contribute to making your family members feel comfortable and secure about the path you have all created together.
